

GERMAN EMPEROR COLONY LEFT NICHOLAS TO FATE

Former Czar Profoundly Anti-German, Declares Prince Troubetzkoy, Recent Russian Refugee.

PEOPLE WANT INTERVENTION
 Bolsheviks Could Be Overthrown if Big Force Was Landed—Japanese and Americans Not Liked—Looked On as Interested Parties.

LONDON, October 19.—Among the many Russians of distinction who, finding life in their own unhappy country impossible at present, have sought a temporary home in England, is the young Prince Nicholas Troubetzkoy, who arrived in London recently. Prince Nicholas, son of the prince of the same name, gentleman of the chamber of the late czar, and well known, like all the members of his family, for his liberal opinions and for his strong friendship for Great Britain, discussed at some length the present condition of affairs in Russia.

Bolshevism, he began emphatically, was no more than a passing madness, grave certainly, but not permanent. Almost all the parties in Russia were agreed as to the necessity of overthrowing the Bolsheviks, although some felt that they ought to give these usurpers at least a temporary support, in order to prevent the intervention of the allies generally, to rid the country of its two chief dangers—Bolshevism and Germany. But the intervention of the allies and the quick, or it would be too late! Now was the time for England and the world to strike with effect. There was no enduring alliance between the Germans and the Bolsheviks; indeed, the former were seeking the support of another party, but so far had not succeeded in finding one. First, they tried to make terms with the extreme right, then with the center, and finally with the Socialist. At present the Germans numbered about 50,000, their presence and their propaganda together with the fact that they were at any rate re-establishing order of a sort in some places, constituted a real danger. For if allied intervention on a big scale should be long delayed, many Russian parties must inevitably fall into the arms of the Germans. There had been the case in the Ukraine. There the allies, who were making use of the Germans to restore order in those regions, and in so doing he had dealt a shrewd blow to Bolshevism.

In reply to further questions, Prince Troubetzkoy, speaking with animation, gave a vivid picture of the new "order" created in Moscow and Petrograd by the Bolsheviks. He said that the Bolsheviks had had no real success in their rule, but that they had succeeded in making a business completely, and only the State-subsidized trades had any goods to sell. All the houses, closed, all stocks and shares were declared void. Everything save rapine and racialism was at a standstill. He showed the extent of German influence in Moscow. Prince Troubetzkoy told how, before Count von Hirsch arrived, the authorities had the large arsenal, the prominent place in the city, the town, Skobeloff was notoriously a Germanophile, and it was feared his very effigy might be used by the Hun Governor. The so-called "retreat" for Austro-German wounded were really so many barracks, where the inmates emerged armed to the teeth, with machine-guns, and were equipped with military uniforms. The inhabitants in a constant state of alarm. In Petrograd the situation was awful, the cholera scourge, which soon became a general misery. Prominent people—nobility, merchants and the like—were being arrested wholesale, without accusation, every day. The Bolshevik authorities trying to rid the city of the enemy in vain, to find some charges to bring against them. There was absolutely nothing to eat, and the rich had accepted potatoes; even the rich had to exist on pommes frites, in default of bread.

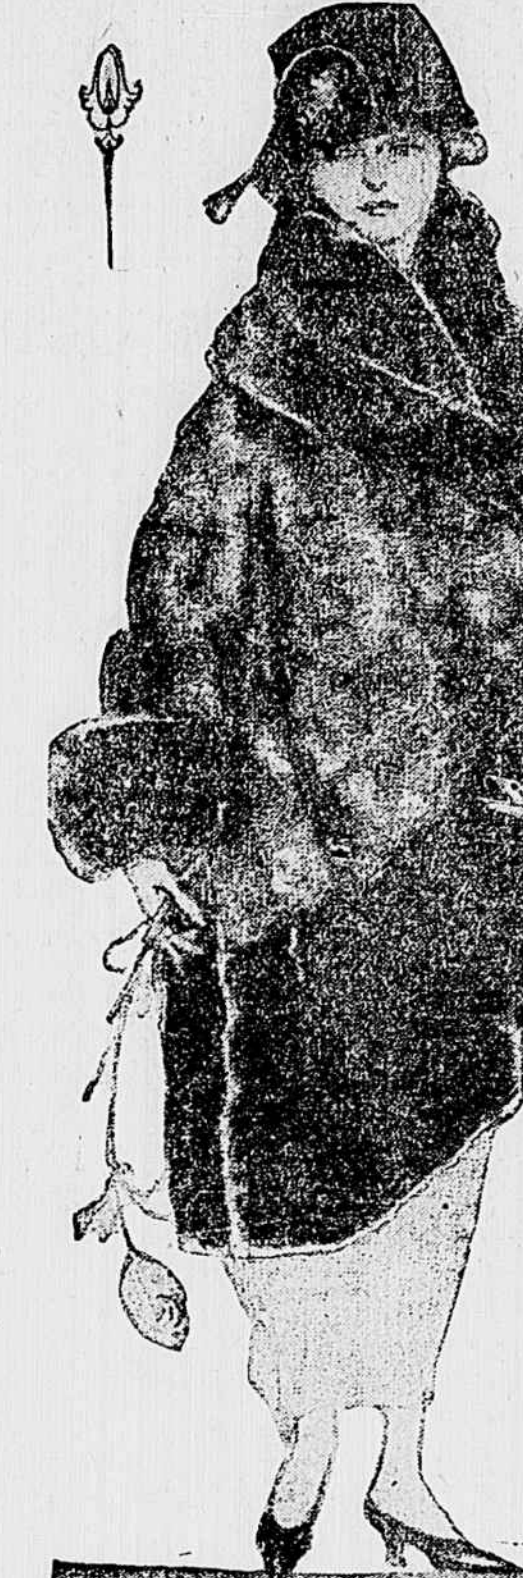

GREAT CHURCH MOVEMENT NOW UNDER WAY IN RUSSIA

Reverting to Moscow, Prince Troubetzkoy laid stress on the importance of the great church movement going on, with the Patriarch at its head. The archbishop, described as Monarchist, Constitutional, and an inveterate enemy of the Bolsheviks, had great influence over all classes. In Russia, indeed, was the only person in Russia who dared to talk in plain language to the Bolsheviks, some of whom had communicated for their crimes. The movement would be in full activity within a few weeks, and the results might be very important. As to the Czech-Slovaks, no one seemed to have expected them to play a big role in the present situation, and their great success has come quite as a surprise. But well as they had done, they could only be regarded as an advance guard, for they were poorly armed and had no artillery at all. If only the allies could intervene, Russia there was a feeling of complete sympathy with England and France, and when they would move to intervene they would be greeted by an enormous number of supporters, including any and all old soldiers who would rally round and hail them as liberators. Naturally, among the mass of the people, the intervention of America and Japan was not so desired, as they were regarded, rightly or wrongly, as having lost interest in the war, and it was quite different with Great Britain and France, who, as all the world knew, had axes to grind. Respecting the treatment of the imperial family, Prince Troubetzkoy had many interesting stories to tell. The Germans tried, for some reason or other, to make a great fuss over the Grand Duke Nicolaievitch when he was at Kiev, but he absolutely refused all the honors offered him. As for the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, who declined to receive Count von Hirsch when he came to Moscow, who was sent to prison two days later and remained there still. The Grand Duke Nicholas Mikhailovitch, described by the prince as "probably the future Emperor of Russia," a man with a world-wide reputation as a historian and a distinguished Member of the League of Nations, and when the French ambassador protested, was taken away on no pretext. One of his sons, a young man, escaped from the Bolshevik clutches and disappeared.

The murder of the czar created a profound impression in the whole unfavorable to the Bolshevik cause. Thus it was a blunder as well as a crime. People prayed openly for "Nicholas" in the Moscow churches, every one knowing the significance of the simple Christian name. Could the German Emperor have saved his cousin's life? Unquestionably. He had only to raise a finger. But Wilhelm knew there was no possibility of an understanding with one so profoundly anti-German; so he coldly left him to his fate.

The New Furs Are Smart

A dashing little fashion is the new fur eton jacket, made of flat caracul with an ermine collar. The hat sponsors the new high crown and rolled brim, with a white quill. Caracul will be much used, the draped tendency in furs is here again, and the cutaway line at the bottom of wraps is the newest, as the long-coat announces.

PRISONER TELLS OF HUN TRICKS IN THE CAMPS

Force British Captives to Remain Near the Line, Where Danger Was Greatest.

LONDON, October 19.—The evidence of escaped British prisoners of war, given before the parliamentary committee of justice yesterday, makes it clear that Villers was not the only place where the Germans misused the Red Cross flag. Many witnesses state that the same thing was done at Ecoust, where there was also a prisoner's camp. One witness who was confined in the cages at both Villers and Ecoust gives the following account of the practice, which is corroborated by other witnesses. "The Ecoust cage was similar to that at Villers, except that the accommodation and sanitary arrangements were worse. The guards were more rough and brutal and the place was constantly under shell fire from our own guns and from our airplanes, which would fly around and attempt to dump bombs and shrapnel near the camp. The food and work were the same, but we were closer to our own lines and were constantly under shell fire. The guards were landstrums and men too old and too young for their jobs. They were a corporal of West Yorkshire and wounded three others of our men. Later in the day another shell burst and wounded one of our guards."

ARVONIA

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
 ARVONIA, Va., October 19.—Mrs. W. L. Boatwright, who has been visiting relatives in Richmond, has returned to her home near New Castle, where Mrs. Charles W. Keel, formerly of this place, now of Norfolk, is here to spend some time at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Le Sueur at Ore Bank.

L. Pitts, Jr., was a visitor at his old home here last week. The local high school has closed temporarily on account of the influenza.

Hopes Women Will Adopt This Habit As Well As Men

Glass of hot water each morning helps us look and feel clean, sweet, fresh.

Happy, bright, alert—vigorous and vivacious—a good clear skin; a natural, rosy complexion and freedom from illness are assured only by clean, healthy blood. If only every woman and likewise every man could realize the wonders of the morning inside bath, what a gratifying change would take place.

Instead of the thousands of sickly, anaemic-looking men, women and girls with pasty or muddy complexions; instead of the multitudes of "nerve wrecks," "rundowns," "brain fags" and pessimists we should see a virile, optimistic throng of rosy-cheeked people everywhere. An inside bath is had by drinking each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver, kidneys and ten yards of bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour fermentations and poisons before putting more food into the stomach. Those subject to sick headache, biliousness, nasty breath, rheumatism, colds, and particularly those who have a pallid, sallow complexion and who are constipated very often, are urged to obtain a quarter pound of limestone phosphate at the drug store which will cost but a trifle but is sufficient to demonstrate the quick and remarkable change in both health and appearance awaiting those who practice internal sanitation.—Adv.

Mrs. Frank D. Irving, of Cartersville, is reported ill from influenza. Leslie Bersch, magistrate, of Arvon, is recovering from an attack of pneumonia, which was diagnosed as influenza. John Deane, rural mail carrier, from Canton, is reported somewhat improved.

Farmers throughout this section are busily engaged in seeding wheat. The dry weather is at present retarding all farming operations. It is understood only an average crop of wheat will be planted, owing to lack of labor and high cost of fertilizers.

Catarrh Distorts Facial Expression

Spreads the Nose, Blurs the Eyes, Puffs the Face, Dries the Lips. How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

TRY THIS HOME TREATMENT FREE.

Catarrh not only makes one feel miserable, it shows this effect in the features, and it usually grows worse. But thanks to a remarkable home treatment, there is recovery in store for every sufferer by the remarkable Gauss self home treatment, which you can try free in your own home.

It is perfectly wonderful the way Gauss Treatment Drives Away Catarrh.

An excessive secretion from the nostrils is an unsightly misery. A breath tainted with the odor of catarrh is an offense against all health and decency. A stomach filled with droppings from diseased nasal cavities may cause untold misery, and ruins the complexion. The bowels clogged with strings ofropy mucus indicates a body literally reeking with catarrh, causing pimples, blotches and other skin eruptions.

The blood, swarming with millions of catarrh germs, entails upon the kidneys a labor that may break them down, and the lungs and bronchial tubes, scourged with the destructive influence of systematic catarrh, can lead to anemia and the most serious consequences. So why continue with all this misery? Send your name and address to-day for a free trial of Mr. Gauss' famous treatment. Mail it to C. E. Gauss, 5519 Main St., Marshall, Mich. It will not cost you a penny to try it, and it surely will astonish you with its wonderful effect. Fill out coupon and mail it to-day.

Fine Old English Estates at Auction

Effects of the War Shown in Offerings of Land and Mansions.

BY IRENE WESTON.
 In its advertising columns, the current number of a high class London publication, furnishes abundant proof of the blow which war has inflicted, financially, as well as instill more cruel wars, upon many of the landed gentry of Great Britain.

Pictures of old and ravishingly beautiful estates that are to be sold at auction, all several pages, and are calculated to arouse a throb of sympathy even in the breast of strangers, for the unfortunate owners who are compelled to part with them. One cannot, for example, gaze upon the picture of Heston Manor, in Hertfordshire, which is to go under the hammer this Spring, without realizing the wrench it must be for the owners of this typical lovely English home, to give it up. It is situated amid the romantic slopes of the Chiltern Hills, and the estate embraces nearly 3,000 acres. Across the surface of a beautiful little lake and broad park beyond, you see the Manor House nestling in a group of wonderful old trees. The name of the owner is not given, nor is such information furnished in regard to the majority of the various estates makes known their ownership to English readers of the advertisements. Many of such readers could, it is feasible, tell why the owner of Heston Manor, for instance, is selling at auction that fine estate of 380 acres situated in the center of the Pychley country.

Who knows but what death of beloved sons on the field of battle has made the owners of some of these superb estates, hold their homes as of little further value to their lives.

Possibly some tragic bereavement through the war, is the cause of Bucknell Manor in Oxfordshire, with its 2,000 acres, including delightful gardens and well-timbered park, being thrown on the market.

Indeed it is quite easy to imagine how the loss of a favorite son might turn a parent from further pleasurable ownership of a residence as is offered for sale in Hertfordshire, fifty-acre grounds of which are interesting by tradition.

The vast number of these country estates and mansions that are to-day on the market, leaves little room to doubt that financial necessity is the main, the explanation of their being put on the market.

The list ranges through many different shires of England and Scotland. In the latter country, are 2,350 acres in the historical West Highland estate of the Duke of Argyll, including valuable fishing rights in Loch Lomond and sea, with well-stocked shooting moors.

A charming photograph among those displayed, is that of a gothic edifice on a lofty terrace partly hidden by a forest of stately trees. This property, which embraces 100 acres of "nicely timbered pleasure grounds," with a fine lake covering a mile course, is offered at $7,500.

There is also to be offered at auction in Leicestershire, the "Historical residential and agricultural estate of Bosworth Park," in the heart of the "Atherstone Hunt." It comprises 2,127 acres, and includes a Mansion House containing eight reception rooms, twenty-two spacious bedrooms, a deer park of four hundred acres, and stabling for twenty-four horses.

Truly the war is being felt in many ways by the Gentry of England.
